Fantasies of the Sea

The Secret Oceans by Betty Ballantine

Distinguished scientists, eager to establish communication with whales, descend into the depths in a live-aboard submersible, the Turtle. They are astonished to encounter "cetacepiens," a super-intelligent dolphin-like species, which, through a series of amazing adventures, introduces the humans to a deeper understanding of the sea.

Fantasies of the Sea

Mermaids

It is thought that the concept of mermaids evolved from the sighting of manatees and dugongs. To many people these creatures looked half human and half fish. Some sailors, long at sea, let their imagination visualize these creatures as beautiful maids of the sea, known as mer-

Fantasies of the Sea

How the Whale Got Its Throat

When a mariner and his raft were swallowed by a whale, the mariner built a grate from pieces of the raft and wedged it into the throat of the whale. This resulted in a narrowed throat, allowing the whale to swallow only the smallest fish, shrimp and krill. After building the grate, the mariner escaped from the whale.

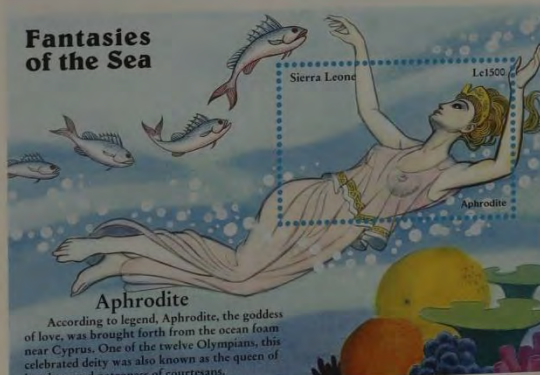

Fantasies of the Sea

Killer Whale Crest

A certain killer whale, wanting the Indians to use him as a totem crest, pulled a Tsimshian fisherman into his undersea house and taught the fisherman to draw figures of the killer whale. After the killer whale brought the fisherman to the surface, the Indians started using the killer whale crest on their totems and house fronts.

Fantasies of the Sea

Aphrodite

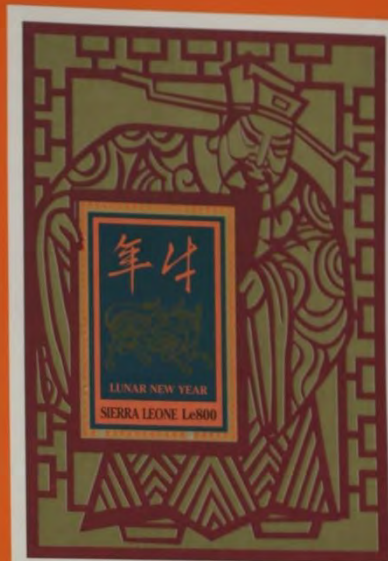

According to legend, Aphrodite, the goddess of love, was brought forth from the ocean foam near Cyprus. One of the twelve Olympians, this celebrated deity was also known as the queen of laughter and patroness of courtesans.

Fantasies of the Sea

Figurehead Faith

Certain beliefs underlie the use of figureheads on sailing ships - the vision of a ship as a living entity, needing a "head" and eyes to see the way across the ocean; the desire to subdue the gods of sea and weather; bared breasts, believed to calm stormy seas.

For he is the servant of the Living God

For at the first glance of the Glory of God

For he knows that God is his Saviour...'

TOUR DE FRANCE

LOUISON BOBET

BAHAMONTES, révélation du Tour 1954

THE DECADE 1950-1960

The Fifties proved to be a decade of many milestones for this Tour which would celebrate its fiftieth birthday in 1953. Perhaps one of the greatest stages ever run from Brive to Agen by the Swiss wonder Hugo Koblet, the eventual champion in 1951, drew superlative praises of his peers. Lucien Lazardès said "Koblet must have a motor under his chest". The Tour at its half century mark was won in 1953 by Louison Bobet, who would go on to win in 1954 and 1955. Bobet is the dominant force of the decade and emerged as French National Team's true leader. His exploits in the Izard are legendary, his moral strength unwavering until he withdrew because of illness at "the roof of the Tour" at the top of Iseran.

After Adolph Hitler committed suicide on April 30, 1945, his successor, Admiral Karl Doenitz, sent General Alfred Jodl to offer an unconditional surrender on May 7, 1945, in Rheims, France. This was broadcast on German radio, after which Prime Minister Winston Churchill immediately announced that May 8th would be a national holiday. This date, known as the Victory in Europe (VE) Day, is the formal celebration of the Allies' victory in Europe during World War II.

The History of Chess

Chess is one of the oldest games, dating back to 6th century AD. Chess was adapted in various ways around the globe and the version that most are familiar with today developed in Europe in the 15th century. A game of both skill and strategy, chess is played both casually and competitively, and remains, as it has been for centuries, one of the most popular games in the world.
