Tristan da Cunha "National Savings" Stamp Forgery

By W. R. WHITE-COOPER

WHEN, in February 1971 the stamps of Tristan da Cunha were decimalised (by surcharging in the new currency) the basic 6d. with a "NATIONAL SAVINGS" overprint was not included in the machine-printed surcharges. Subsequently, this 6d. postal-fiscal item (which was accepted for postage although intended purely as a savings stamp) was issued with a rubber hand-stamp surcharge "2½p" with bars obliterating the "6d.". It is now listed by Gibbons as S.G.F2 priced at £12 mint and £15 used in the 1975 catalogue.

This hand surcharging was done locally on individual stamps so that the position of the surcharge varies a little from stamp to stamp but its characteristics are fairly constant.

It is not surprising that such a scarce stamp attracted the attention of the forger whose work is definitely dangerous although careful examination quickly reveals differences which leave no doubt. These can be seen in the illustration which, with the notes on the differences between the genuine and forged surcharges should put all intending purchasers on their guard.

Genuine

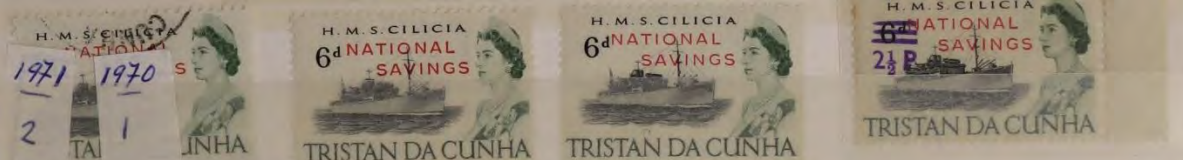

Forgery

GENUINE

- (1) The loop of the "p" is more rounded—and the centre hole more circular.
- (2) The main figure "2" appears more upright and its base is straight and not tilted.
- (3) The fraction bar shows a large gap between it and the base of the large "2".

FORGERY

- (1) The shape of the loop of the "p" is wider and the centre hole is more elliptical.
- (2) The figure "2" appears very slightly broader and the face of the 2 has a slight tilt up to the right.
- (3) The fraction bar of the "½" is slightly nearer to the base of the figure "2".
