British Scarlet

A news-sheet of 1645 said of the Parliamentarian New Model Army that 'the men are Redcoats all, and are only distinguished by the several facings of their coats'.

The Restoration army continued to wear the scarlet uniforms. Light porting came, but dress, and in the kit remains

Carl Lewis

The American athlete replicated Jesse Owens's feat of 1936 by winning four gold medals, in the 100m, 200m, 4x100m Relay and Long Jump.

Daley Thompson

Considered by many the greatest all-round athlete of all time, Thompson defended the Decathlon gold medal he had won four years earlier in impressive style, leading from the first event to the last.

Los Angeles 1984

A last-minute boycott by the Soviet bloc countries did not take the shine off another impressive haul of British medals, with Sebastian Coe, Daley Thompson, Tessa Sanderson and Steve Nunn (Shooting) and a young rower, Matthew Pinsent, as one of the Coxed Four, winning the Paralympic Games were split between Stoke Mandeville, the Buckinghamshire town which had begun staging what is now regarded as the Paralympic Games back in 1948.

HIDING BEHIND THE SOFA

While the Doctor and his companions often have to demonstrate extraordinary bravery during their adventures, perhaps the real heroes are the countless children who have spent decades watching the programme from behind the sofa, hiding from marauding armies of Daleks, Cybermen and Weeping Angels. No matter how scared they might be, they overcome their fears to watch the Doctor defeating his foes and saving the universe.
